Death prohibited: A protest against federal bar on new cemetery in Brazil

1 There is no more room to bury the dead. They cannot be cremated, and laws forbid a new cemetery.
 2 So, Roberto Pereira da Silva, the mayor of the Brazilian farm town, Biritiba Mirim, has proposed a solution:
 3 outlaw death. The mayor's proposal to the town council asks residents to take good care of their health in 4 order not to die and says that infractors will be held responsible for their acts. The bill, which sets no
 5 penalty for passing away, is meant as a protest against a 2003 federal law that has barred a new or 6 expanded cemetery in Biritiba Mirim, a town of 28,000 people, 45 miles east of São Paulo. The bill is 7 laughable, unconstitutional, and as such will never be approved. However, Gilson Soares de Campos, an 8 aide to the mayor, argues that it is a good marketing strategy to persuade the government to modify the 9 environmental legislation that is barring the town from building a new cemetery.

10 The 2003 decree by Brazil's National Environment Council bars new or expanded cemeteries in so-
 11 called permanent preservation areas or in areas with high water tables. Environmental-protection laws rule 12 out cremation. That left no option for Biritiba Mirim, a town on the so-called green belt of rich farmland that 13 supplies fruit and vegetables for São Paulo, Brazil's biggest city. The town produces 90 percent of the 14 watercress consumed in Brazil. Most of Biritiba Mirim is situated above the underground water source that 15 supplies water for about 2 million people in São Paulo. The rest of the town area is covered by protected 16 forest.

17 More than 50,000 people already are buried in the 3,500 crypts and tombs in Biritiba Mirim's
 18 municipal cemetery. The cemetery ran out of space last month and 20 residents who have died since
 19 November are sharing a crypt. But even that solution has limits because the crypts will be filled to capacity
 20 in six months. There are even buried people under the walkways. Considering that people are inevitably 21 going to die, a solution has to be found, or people will have to break the law.
